vintners might buy tin from Cornwall, herrings from Ipswich and grain from anywhere they could find it, to ship to Bordeaux. The importance of supplying Gascony with grain without depleting the home market led English merchants to purchase it as far afield as Prussia, and in this way the Baltic trade was opened up. The greatest commodity for export, however, was English cloth.

Many vintners had their own ships, reaping additional profits from wine freighted for other merchants. The smaller traders took their own ships over and did their own buying, the greater vintners entrusted their affairs to reliable employees. Medieval ships naturally varied greatly in size, but in the late fourteenth and early fifteenth centuries, ships of about 1,000 tuns burthen were by no means unusual, while from the mid-fifteenth century there was a universal decline in size throughout Europe until few were more than 200 tuns and the majority between 100 and 150 tuns. The popularity of small ships is not hard to explain since they needed only a small crew, were quick and easy to load and could enter almost any harbour, however poor, and finally, if sunk, the financial loss was easier to bear.¹⁴ Shipping obviously involved considerable capital outlay. The voyages, too, took a long time since the ships, with no navigational aids except the stars, hugged the shore and called in at ports fairly frequently for supplies. A normal voyage from London, for instance, might involve calls at Sandwich, Southampton, Conquet in Brittany, and Bordeaux. It is for this reason that vintners are frequently found trafficking in other commodities, just as other merchants whose main interest might be in cloth or fish are also found dealing in wine. The Anglo-French wars of the late fourteenth and fifteenth centuries took a heavy toll of English shipping, not only in ships captured or sunk, but in those commandeered by the Crown for transport for its armies or for Channel-keeping duties, because it had very few ships of its own. Thus English shipping declined and the vintners lost not only valuable assets in the ships themselves, but also incurred increasingly heavy freight charges. By the mid-fifteenth century almost all the carrying trade had passed into the hands of aliens who continued to dominate it until the very end of the century. The lack of English ships is well illustrated. For instance, in 1468, David Selly, a London vintner, was accused of contravening a statute of 1382 which laid down that wines should be shipped in English ships only. The previous April he had landed his own wines and those of other merchants in a ship of Zeeland and his defence was that when he was in Bordeaux he could find no English ship available.¹⁵

The city of London records contain many cases of disputes over sales of wine. In 1305, Bernard de la Rochelle (whose name clearly gives his origins, but who must have been a London citizen) was attached to answer Arnold de Teler of Gascony in a plea of trespass. Arnold complained that Bernard had bought from him five casks of wine for £10 in London, taking him to a tavern and paying him 20s. on account. While they were sitting there, he said, Bernard had had the casks loaded and taken away. Bernard defended himself by saying that he had acted merely as a broker on behalf of Adam le Brocher and the latter had given him the 20s. for the advance payment and Arnold had himself made delivery to Adam. A jury from Vintry Ward found that the plaintiff had indeed delivered the wine to Adam and not to Bernard, and it was judged that Arnold gain nothing from his complaint and that Bernard be acquitted. These glimpses into court cases show nothing of the personalities and motives involved, and in this case there is apparently no reason to explain why Arnold brought the action, since on the face of it there seems to be no case at all. This is not, however, true of another legal action in the same year. Richard de Mauncestre and Peter le Taverner charged Peter Bolom that they had bought twelve casks of wine from him for £24, paying him £6 down and security for the remainder. At the time of purchase the wine was so dense and impure that it was unrecognisable by sight and taste, but the defendant had promised them that it was 'of good proof and short assize and would draw well in the end', so the plaintiffs agreed to let him keep it for a week. At the end of that time, they met in London and the defendant promised them that the wine was good and that he would indemnify them if it was not. The plaintiffs took the wine and kept it for a fortnight and found it so corrupt that they asked for their indemnity and were refused. The defendant admitted the sale but claimed the plaintiffs had not paid the remaining £18 as agreed at the time of purchase and that he had sued for it. The plaintiffs said the wine was other than he claimed and sought release from payment. In the sheriffs' court the verdict was given against the plaintiffs and they had to pay the defendant his £18. Having lost the suit for debt, Richard and Peter immediately sued for a remedy for the bad wine and this time they won their case.¹⁶

The merchant vintner himself played a very personal role in the wine trade. Most of them travelled to Bordeaux once or twice a year to buy wine, often leaving a factor or partner there to complete the business. At home each relied on apprentices to carry out lesser tasks, increasing their responsibilities as their seven-year apprenticeship grew to a close, and

Commission of oyer and terminer to William Inge, Henry Spigurnel, Robert son of Payn, Edmund de Malo Lacu, John de Foxle and John de Button.

Although the king had lately committed to Bartholomew de Badelesmere the custody of his castle of Bristol and of the town and barton of Bristol, to hold during pleasure, for a certain farm to be rendered yearly at the Exchequer, and frequently enjoined on the men of the town to answer to him as constable of the castle and keeper of the town and barton, or to his attorney in that behalf, in all matters which appertain to the custody of the castle, town and barton, William de Axe then mayor of the town, and John le Taverner, Thomas de la Grave, John de Kerdyf, John Hasard, Richard Colpek, Robert de Holhurst, Robert Martin, William de Clyf, Richard de Wodehulle, Thomas Uppediche, Walter Fraunceys clerk, Richard le White pesshoner, Thomas de Salop, Adam Wysman, John Fraunceys the elder, Richard de Chedre, John de Keynesham, Philip de Sweyneseye, John le Lang maryner, Roger Blanket, John Legat, Nicholas le Taillur, Philip le Spicer, Nicholas de Farleye, Gilbert de Derby, William Flemmynge, William Burgeys, Thomas Butiller and Richard Legat, with others of the town, ignoring the king's commands, refused to obey him or his attorney. Subsequently the king, having for divers causes taken the liberty of the town into his hands, and having committed it during his pleasure to the said Bartholomew de Badelesmere, who was to answer at the Exchequer for the issues thereof, the same John le Taverner, William de Clyf and Gilbert Pokerel, exercised the offices of mayor and bailiffs in the town, as if the liberty of the town had not been taken into the king's hands, and they with the other persons above named, by their own authority, usurped and converted to their own uses the profits accruing in the town, which Bartholomew de Badelesmere, as constable of the castle and keeper of the town and barton and of the liberty thereof by virtue of the king's commissions to him and to his attorney, ought to have received. They also forcibly impeded him and his attorney and the other ministers appointed by him for collecting, exercising, and doing those things which appertain to such custody, in the collection and execution of the same, and beat, wounded, and imprisoned his deputies; and also in divers places in the town they made barricades and other impediments, not permitting victuals or other things to be borne or even carried from the town, or through it, to the castle for the strengthening and custody thereof. Furthermore they forcibly broke the king's mills by the castle and made frequent attacks, as against enemies, on the men who were in the castle for its custody, by shooting arrows and quarrels into the castle, and finally they erected and crenellated a wall of stone and lime in the street called Wynchestrete and made barricades in divers places opposite the castle, discharging arrows and quarrels through the battlements against the castle. They also with armed force hindered Thomas de Berkele, John de Welyngton, master Richard de Abyndon, and the same John de Button, sent by the king to Bristol to assess a tallage in that town for his use and to make divers inquisitions there, from doing those things which appertained to their office, and imprisoned them. Further they conspired together and entered into a confederacy among themselves to commit trespasses against the king, his constable and keeper, and the attorney of the latter. They assessed many tallages on the commonalty of the town, by reason whereof they oppressed the people there, converted the greater part of the money accruing from such tallages to their own uses, and having no consideration to the caption of the liberty of the town into the king's hands, but rather treating with contempt his action in that matter, held an election among themselves of a mayor and bailiffs for the town, who cease not to execute such offices there in contempt of the king's mandates, to the manifest derogation of the king's right and to the impoverishment of the town and against the peace. The justices, of whom William Inge is to be one, are to enquire into these matters by oath of good men of the county of Gloucester.

To the sheriff of Somerset:

Whereas the king lately, by writ of judgment witnessed by Roger le Brabançon, then chief justice to hold pleas before the king, ordered the sheriff of Gloucester to arrest John le Taverner, Richard Colpel, William de Clif, Robert Martyn, William Snowe and John Simenel, outlawed at the king's suit for the death of Alexander de Vilers, whether found within the liberty of the town of Bristol or without, so that he should have their bodies before the king in fifteen days from Martinmas last; at which day he returned that he had been to Bristol to arrest the abovenamed persons, and that he found them in the guildhall of Bristol, and that they and Robert de Wyldemersh, who called himself bailiff of that town, and the community of the town would not permit the attachment to be made, but hindered it wholly; wherefore the king ordered the sheriff not to omit on account of the liberty of that town, or any other liberty of his county, to arrest the abovenamed persons and the aforesaid Richard de Wildemersh and all others of the community who hindered him as above stated, and to have their bodies before the king in the octaves of the Holy Trinity last past, taking with him for this purpose the posse of his county; to which the sheriff returned that he went in person to Bristol, and that he caused all the community of the same to be assembled in the guildhall, and that, after he had explained the tenor of the king's order to them, they unanimously answered that they would not permit the aforesaid John le Taverner or Robert de Wyldemersh or any other person of that town to be attached or taken away thence, and they hindered the sheriff from executing the king's order by force and arms; whereupon the sheriff attached by word and imposition of hands Henry le Shipman and many others of that town who hindered him, but the persons so attached broke the attachment by force and arms; wherefore the sheriff, taking with him a great posse of the county, afterwards went to the town to execute the king's order, and he found the gates of the town closed against him, and the whole community raised in war against the king, having associated with them a multitude of malefactors from Bayonne and Wales, and that the community drained and wholly dried up the ditch of the king's castle there, and broke and destroyed the king's mill of the castle, and made a ditch in that town before the castle gate of the breadth and depth of 24 feet, and strengthened the ditch with a strong peel, and constructed there and elsewhere in the city bretasches, chains, springalds, and other engines to attack and approach the castle, so that no person in the castle could leave the castle towards the town in any way, retaining the town against the king and preparing other things in express rebellion against him with banners raised; the king, wishing to have further information concerning these actions and to recall the community to obedience by gentle means, has caused Aymer de Valencia earl of Pembroke, William Inge, John de Insula and John de Mutford to be sent to Bristol to inform themselves fully concerning the premises, and to induce the community to obey the king as they should do, and, if the community should remain in rebellion, to ordain, in the king's name and by his authority, ways and means to punish the community, as contained in the king's letters patent to the aforesaid William and John de Insula and John de Mutford; and although they and the earl went to that town and endeavoured to induce the community to obey the king by gentle ways and means offered by them to the community on the king's behalf, the community wholly refused to obey the king in the premises; whereupon the earl, with the counsel of the said William and John de Insula, according to the power granted to them by the aforesaid letters, enjoined the sheriff of Somerset to cause proclamation to be made forbidding anyone to communicate with any of the said community, or to sell, lend, or minister to them victuals or other necessaries, and to arrest any whom he should find infringing this prohibition, as the earl has signified to the king by his letters, and the said William and John de Insula have explained to the king by word of mouth upon their return; the king, approving the action of the earl and William and John de Insula, orders the sheriff to execute everything ordered by the earl on the king's behalf.

By the king.

Appointment of Aymer de Valencia earl of Pembroke, William Inge, John de Insula and John de Mutford, to go to Bristol, where they are to inform themselves thoroughly touching the undermentioned disturbances, and to re-call the commonalty of the town to their obedience to the king, but if the commonalty continues in rebellion, the commissioners are, under the king's authority, to punish them. By writ under the testimony of Roger le Brabanzun, then chief justice of the King's Bench, the king commanded the sjeriff of Gloucester that he should not fail, on account of the liberty of the town of Bristol, to take John le Taverner, Richard Colpek, William de Clif, Robert Martyn, William Snowe and John Simenel, outlaws at the king's suit for the death of Alexander de Vilers in the town of Bristol, wherever they should be found, whether within the liberty of the town, or without it in the said county, and keep them in prison so that he should have their bodies before the king in fifteen days of Martinmas last, to receive judgment of the court therein. On which day the sheriff returned that he had approached the town of Bristol to take the abovenamed outlaws, whom he found in the Guildhall of the town, and that they and Robert de Wyldemershe, who called himself bailiff of the town, and the commonalty of the town, did not permit him to attach them, wherefore the king commanded the sheriff that he should not omit, on account of the said liberty or any other liberty of his county, to arrest John le Taverner and the other outlaws and also the said Robert de Wildemershe and all others of the commonalty of the town who had hindered him in the execution of the king's mandates, and keep them in prison so that he should have their bodies before the king in the Octave of Holy Trinity last past to receive what the king, with the Council, should order. On which day the sheriff returned that he in his proper person had approached the town of Bristol to execute the king's mandate, and that he had caused the entire commonalty of the said town to assemble in the Guildhall, and upon his setting forth before the commonalty the tenor of the king's mandate, all of the commonalty unanimously answered that they would not permit the said John le Taverner, or Robert de Wyldemershe, or any other of the town, to be attached or led away from the town, and they forcibly hindered him in the execution of the mandate, whereupon the sheriff, by word and the laying-on of hands, attached Henry le Shipman and many others of the town who had hindered him; but the persons so arrested forcibly broke the attachment, on which account the sheriff, taking the great posse of the county with him, approached the town to execute the mandate, when he found the gates of the town shut against him, and that the entire commonalty of the town had collected together to them a great multitude of malefactors, as well men of Bayonne as Welshmen, and that they had drained the dyke of the castle and dried it thoroughly, broken and destroyed the mill of the castle, and in the town, before the castle gate, made a dyke of the depth and width of 24 feet, and fortified the dyke with a strong peel, and there and elsewhere in the town constructed wooden forts, springalds and other engines for attacking the castle, so that no one in the castle could go forth towards the town, and for holding the town against the king and, with standards raised, had made other preparations for open rebellion against the king.

To Henry le Scrop and his fellows, justices to hold pleas before the king:

Order to enquire by a jury of the town of Bristol and of the counties of Gloucester and Somerset what goods and chattels John le Taverner of Bristol, Robert Martyn of Bristol, Richard Colpek of Bristol, and William de Clyf, who were outlawed for felony before Henry Spigurnel and his fellows, justices appointed to hear and determine that felony, had within or without the aforesaid town, which ought to be forfeited to the king by reason of the felony, and concerning the value of the same, and in whose hands they are, and who ought to answer to the king for the same, and to charge the mayor and community of Bristol with the value of the said felons' goods and chattels that came to their hands, and if the value of the goods and chattels that came to their hands do not amount to £840, to acquit them of the difference between that sum and the value of the goods and chattels that came to their hands, they having prayed the king for remedy that whereas the goods and chattels of the said felons were appraised at £840 by certain foreign men, enemies of their community, who were totally ignorant of the value of the aforesaid goods and chattels, of which a great part was outside the town, so that the mayor and community could not put their hands upon them, and a great part of the same was taken into the king's hands by the sheriff of Gloucester, and are still in his custody, the said mayor and community are nevertheless charged with the whole of the above sum by the estreats of the aforesaid Henry Spigurnel and his fellows, delivered at the exchequer.

By the council.

To the bailiffs of Great Yarmouth:

At the complaint of Hugh le Taverner of Kyngeston-on-Hull that whereas he had loaded at Le Sluse in Flanders a ship belonging to him and Geoffrey de Sprotteley called La Nicholas of Kyngeston-on-Hull with cloth and other goods of his to the value of £48 6s 8d, in order to bring the same to Kyngeston-on-Hull to trade there with the same, certain malefactors of the power of Robert county of Flanders attacked and slew the men and mariners in the ship whilst sailing to England and took the ship and goods with them to the port of the Swyn, the king frequently requested the count to cause justice to be done to Hugh; but he has not done so, as appears by the letters patent of the community of the town of Kyngeston-on-Hull under their common seal: wherefore the king orders the bailiffs to arrest goods of the men and merchants of the power of the count to the value of £58 6s 8d, at which Hugh's goods and his portion of the ship are appraised, and to detain them until Hugh have been satisfied for that sum and his damages or until otherwise ordered, certifying the king of their proceedings and of the goods arrested by them.

To the mayor and bailiffs of Bristol:

Whereas John le Taverner, burgess of that town, who was indicted before Henry Spygurnel and his fellows, the king's justices appointed to hear and determine the felony of the death of Alexander de Villers, slain in the county of Gloucester, for the death of the said Alexander, was put in exigent to be outlawed because he did not appear before the said justices to stand to right, and was afterwards outlawed on this account, and the king pardoned him the outlawry and the abjuration of the realm that he made by reason of the said death, on condition that he stand to right in the king's court if he or any one will speak against him concerning the death, and granted him his lands, which pertained to the king as escheats by reason of the abjuration and outlawry, and all his goods and chattels, which were forfeited to the king; wherefore the king ordered the mayor and bailiffs to deliver to the said John all his lands and goods, to hold according to the tenor of the king's letters patent; and they signified to the king that the said lands were in the hands of John de Weston the younger, by the king's gift, and that certain of his goods were in the hands of John Fraunceys the elder, and other men of that town, by delivery from Richard de la Ryver, late sheriff of Gloucester, who is charged therewith at the exchequer, so that the mayor and bailiffs could not deliver the lands and goods to John; wherefore the king orders them to cause the goods in the hands of John Fraunceys and the aforesaid men to be delivered to the said John. The king will cause the aforesaid Richard, John Fraunceys, and the other men to be discharged of the said goods at the exchequer.

To the sheriffs of London:

Order to arrest the goods and merchandise of the men of the town of St Omer to the value of £200, and to keep the same safely until Hugh le Tygheler of Lincoln, merchant, have been satisfied for that sum, or until further orders, certifying the king of the goods arrested by them, the king having frequently written to the mayor and échevins of that town to cause payment of the above sum to be made to Hugh, who complained to the king that he delivered £200 sterling to William Bondeleti, changer of that town, to exchange, so that William should pay them to Hugh at London in like money at Whitsuntide in the 15th year of the king's reign [30 May 1322], and that the mayor and échevins of that town mainperned for William for all things touching the exchange, and that William secretly left the town without satisfying Hugh; to which the mayor and échevins replied that Hugh had delivered the said money to the said William their changer, and that they were bound to Hugh for payment thereof, and that they would pay him the same together with his damages in honour of the king; but, as they desired to defer payment for a long time, the king afterwards requested them to satisfy Hugh for the said sum and his damages without delay, so that it might not behove the king to provide another remedy for Hugh; and the letters containing this request were delivered to the mayor and échevins by Walter le Taverner of Lincoln, by whom Hugh sent the letters, when the mayor and échevins scorned and tore the said letters, and did nothing in response, as appears by the letters testimonial of the mayor and community of Lincoln; wherefore Hugh has prayed the king to provide him with a remedy.

Writ of venire facias in pursuance to the sheriff of Gloucester.

Inquisition before the said Henry and John. Bristol. Monday the morrow of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist.

John le Taverner, late mayor of Bristol, and others (many named), were confederated to maintain the said John in the office of mayor, and falsely and maliciously indicted many good and lawful men, who did not consent to the conspiracy, and ejected many from the liberty of the town, and took their goods and chattels, wherefore grave dissensions and discords arose and continued until, on Thursday the feast of St. Giles the Abbot 10 Edward II, the said John le Taverner, Thomas his son, and Robert Martyn, were outlawed for the death of Alexander de Vylers, and abjured the realm. On Monday after St. Nicholas 15 Edward II the said John, Thomas, and Robert, returned to Bristol and showed the king's charters of pardon of the outlawry and abjuration, and immediately afterwards, in the time of Richard Tilly; then mayor, maliciously vexed many good and lawful men of the town by divers grievances and extortions.

19 January 1324

Gloucester

To the justices of the Bench:

Notification that John de Evesham came before the king on Thursday after Hilary [19 January 1324], and sought to replevy to Clement Turtle, Thomas de Wyteleye and John le Taverner their land in the suburbs of Bristol, which was taken into the king's hands for their default before the justices against Henry son of William de Hanyngfeld. This is signified to the justices.
